The story unfolds in Philadelphia, where the arrival of the virus sends shockwaves through the community. As the city's hospitals are overwhelmed and the streets are filled with the sick and dying, the bonds between family and friends are tested to their limits.

At the center of the novel is Mary Mallon, a young Irish immigrant who works as a cook for a wealthy family. When her employers fall ill, Mary is quarantined along with them. As the virus takes hold, she becomes increasingly isolated and alone, her only solace found in the stolen moments she shares with a quarantined neighbor, Thomas.

Thomas is a young doctor who is struggling to cope with the horrors he has witnessed. Haunted by the suffering he has seen, he finds himself questioning his faith and his purpose in life. As he and Mary grow closer, they find solace in each other's company, but their love is threatened by the ever-present danger of the virus.

Keane's writing is both lyrical and unflinching, capturing the raw emotions and desperate struggles of her characters. She paints a vivid picture of a city under siege, where fear and despair reign supreme. Yet, amidst the darkness, she also finds moments of hope and resilience, reminding us of the human spirit's capacity to endure.
