

NGOs and Lifeworlds in Africa: Transdisciplinary Perspectives

Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) have become increasingly prominent in Africa over the past few decades. These organizations play a wide range of roles in African societies, from providing basic services to advocating for social and political change. However, the relationship between NGOs and local communities is often complex and contested. This book explores this relationship from a transdisciplinary perspective, drawing on a range of case studies to provide a nuanced understanding of the ways in which NGOs interact with local lifeworlds.

Theories of NGO-Community Relations

There is a wide range of theoretical perspectives on the relationship between NGOs and local communities. Some scholars argue that NGOs can play a positive role in development by providing resources and expertise to communities. Others argue that NGOs can be detrimental to local communities, by undermining traditional authority structures and promoting individualism. This book draws on a range of theoretical perspectives to provide a nuanced understanding of the complex and multifaceted relationship between NGOs and local communities.

Case Studies

The book includes a range of case studies from across Africa. These case studies explore the different ways in which NGOs interact with local lifeworlds. Some of the case studies focus on the positive impact of NGOs, while others focus on the negative impact of NGOs. The case studies provide a rich and detailed account of the complex and multifaceted relationship between NGOs and local communities.
