Challenging the Neoliberal Paradigm

The book critically examines the limitations of neoliberal peacebuilding and statebuilding, which prioritize market-oriented reforms, privatization, and limited state intervention. It argues that these approaches have exacerbated inequalities, undermined local agency, and failed to address the underlying causes of conflict.

Exploring Alternative Frameworks

The authors present a diverse range of alternative frameworks that offer promising alternatives to the neoliberal paradigm. These frameworks emphasize:

- Community-based approaches: Empowering local communities to lead peacebuilding and development efforts.
- Participatory governance: Ensuring that citizens have a meaningful voice in decision-making processes.
- Conflict transformation: Addressing the root causes of conflict through non-violent means.
- Sustainable development: Promoting economic and social development that meets the needs of all citizens.
- Regional cooperation: Fostering collaboration among African states to address cross-border challenges.

Case Studies and Lessons Learned

The book draws upon case studies from various African countries to illustrate the practical application of alternative approaches. These case studies provide valuable lessons on the challenges and successes of these strategies, offering insights for future peacebuilding and statebuilding efforts.

"Alternatives To Neoliberal Peacebuilding And Statebuilding In Africa" is a timely and invaluable contribution to the field. It challenges the dominant narrative and presents a compelling case for adopting alternative frameworks that prioritize local ownership, inclusivity, and sustainability. This book is an essential resource for policymakers, practitioners, researchers, and anyone committed to building peaceful and prosperous societies in Africa.
