The monologue

*You may have a key,
For your childhood dream.
But I may have changed the locks.
There's no trust or anything, you see.
You think you're an operator smooth,
And always right, and very bright;
Swinging butter dipped deals,
All the while making me a noose?
Although I've burned your bridges,
One of the best things I may have done.
You still keep an eye on my writings,
After earning my riches?
You still feel entitled somehow?
As if you're always right,
Maybe you should grow up,
and try to move on now,
Instead of providing unsolicited advice?
Try to work on yourself, and learn to let go of gnawing old bones, or is there nothing better to do?
In that case, why don't you make yourself some bow ties?
That'll put your time to some good use.
Understand that there's nothing here for you,
but a dead dream that was stewed.
Don't waste your breath or time blowing up the fuse.*

Prepare to embark on a captivating literary adventure with "The Lost Collection: Poems, Monologues, and More." This remarkable anthology is a treasure trove of emotions, a vibrant tapestry woven with the threads of human experiences.

A Symphony of Voices

Within these pages, you'll encounter a chorus of voices, each echoing a unique perspective. Poets, monologuists, and storytellers unite to present a multifaceted exploration of love, loss, joy, sorrow, and the unfathomable depths of the human heart.

Eloquent Verses that Stir the Soul

My Brother Has a Habit

My brother has a habit
He's been practicing for years.
He takes a pair of French fries
And sticks them in his ears.
He won't say why he does it,
And may not even know.
It's just a thing my brother's done
Since very long ago.

It's slightly gross, it's silly
And obviously strange,
But once you have a habit
It's difficult to change.
He's lately added something
Even grosser, I suppose—
He also takes two French fries
And puts them in his nose.

Prepare to be captivated by the lyrical beauty of poems that dance across the page, painting vivid images and evoking a symphony of emotions. These verses delve into the profound and the ephemeral, capturing the essence of human existence.

Monologues that Give Voice to Hidden Truths

Immerse yourself in the compelling narratives of compelling monologues that give voice to the unspoken. These characters leap from the page, revealing their innermost thoughts, secrets, and aspirations.

Stories that Illuminate the Human Spirit

Chocolate's Adventure

by

In a forest far away there lived a porcupine named Chocolate. He was not the only animal that lived in the forest. There were chipmunks, squirrels, rabbits, and foxes. The forest was an exciting place to live.

However, Chocolate was not invited to play with the other animals. They did not like him because sometimes he accidentally shot his prickles at them. So Prickles tried to take his prickles off his back, but that did not work. Then he tried to put mud on his back to cover them up, but that did not work either. Then he put a shoe on his head to hide them, but that did not work.

So he went home and pouted. Suddenly he heard a loud coyote howling –HowlHowlHowwwllllll! He sprinted out of his house and found the coyote. He shot his prickles at the coyote and the coyote ran away.

Prickles was a hero!

Get lost in the intricate tapestry of short stories that showcase the resilience, vulnerability, and indomitable spirit of humanity. These tales explore the complexities of relationships, the transformative power of adversity, and the enduring search for meaning.
